Finally she knew

She searched and she searched but she could not find God

Buddha's temple, Christ's church Mohammad's mosque, Krishna's garden
They all left a fragrant trail that kept her searching and searching But still she could not find God

She looked within finding a myriad of intriguing things Kept her amused for years And still God eluded her

She read the books listened to the great masters' words She prayed
Still nothing
Failure haunted her in her search for the Divine Could so many find God but not her?

Finally she stopped
She was still
And she found it it was right there beside her, singing celebrating with her in laughter loving her through her children's eyes lying with her as she bathed feasting with her at her table And finally she knew
